AU Graduate in Forbes Business Magazine

MBA graduate Mr Kenji Nakamura, was featured in the August 2007 edition of Forbes Asia Magazine. Forbes interviewed Kenji about his career path from Mercedes Benz Finance to Director of Operational Analyses at AMB Properties Japan and the positive impact the MBA degree has made on his professional development. Kenji describes how he was able to utilize the MBA to further his career and ultimately how the education he received at AU was an enormous contribution to his success within the foreign market.

Anaheim University recently re-launched its website, www.anaheim.edu in a further technological development of the services Anaheim University strives to provide students, graduates and visitors. Highlights of the website include a section dedicated to the AU Alumni and a new chat with a live advisor system. The AU Alumni webpage, accessible via the www.anaheim.edu website, is designed to provide a platform for the alumni to foster an interactive communication network, post-graduation. Along with the public-accessible AU Alumni pages, AU is also launching an AU Alumni only accessible database and discussion board which will provide contact details, professional details and a discussion room dedicated to AU Alumni members. The website also features interview videos with AU Alumni as well as seminars and interviews with prominent business professionals and leaders conducted by

AU. These are viewable online now at the AU website and will expand as AU interviews more graduates and business leaders in the future. Finally, the website live-chat feature enables prospective students to "chat" with a student advisor and receive immediate information about Anaheim University's programs from anywhere in the world.

Graduate Interviews - Dr. Julio Garcia

Dr. Julio Garcia, one of AU's alumni, is an excellent example of how AU's MBA program is quite complementary to any industry or profession. Prior to attending AU, Dr. Garcia had already acquired a PhD and aspired to pursue an MBA to become a more well-rounded professional within the biotechnology industry. AU interviewed Dr. Garcia about student life and the effects of the MBA on his career.

AU: How has the MBA degree contributed to your professional career development?

Dr. Garcia: The biotechnology industry lacks business professionals with scientific backgrounds. I am one of the few lucky ones with a degree in science and in business. Thus, the MBA degree has been extremely helpful in giving me a huge advantage in my field.

AU: What do you believe are the benefits of acquiring an MBA degree via AU's online program?

Dr. Garcia: Students have the chance to keep their full-time job while also being enrolled in a full-time MBA program. Additionally, professors are not limited to the place where you live. At Anaheim University, you can have access to the best professors in the world even though they reside thousands of miles away.

Professional MBA students celebrate the graduation of two classmates with Dr. Hartley.

The Anaheim University Alumni Association recently sponsored the Anaheim University Mid-summer Party social event, which was attended by alumni, current students, and their guests. Participants took the opportunity to network and socialize in the AU Akio Morita Learning Center courtyard in Tokyo, and enjoyed Morita Sake, California wine, beer, and food platters put on by the Anaheim University Alumni. The event followed the AU Alumni Seminar Series which featured the renowned 60 Minutes Japan edition and NHK television broadcaster, Mr. Peter Barakan. Peter Barakan shared his experience and knowledge of living and working in Japan in his seminar 'Too Late to Stop Now - 33 Years in Tokyo and Counting...'

The event was also attended by Anaheim University Professor and Vice President for Student Affairs, Dr. William B. Hartley, who attended as part of his schedule for regular visits to the Tokyo Center to support and build alumni activities. The Alumni Association looks forward to planning future events for graduates and students. The AU Alumni can be contacted by email at alumni@anaheim.edu.

Please check the AU website for more details, photos and updates on this and other events.
